

Public Source Map for Prabhupada and Related Sanatana Content

Scope and selection standard

I treated your request as a source-hunting and prioritization job for Cursor ingestion, not as a content-summary job. I prioritized sources that are either official, archival, or long-standing repositories with clear primary-source value. I also separated canonical sources from useful but secondary/community mirrors, because mixing those will create messy provenance inside your app. The biggest practical constraint is rights: several of the best Prabhupada sources are publicly readable, but that does not automatically mean your application can bulk-download, re-host, or train on them without permission. The biggest rights-sensitive area is BBT content. ¹

My working assumptions were simple. You want publicly accessible web sources, not private drives; you want Prabhupada-first priority; and you want enough exact entry links that Cursor can crawl, index, and build documentation around them. On that basis, the strongest stack is: Vedabase and Bhaktivedanta Archives first, then PrabhupadaVani / Vanisource / Vaniquotes / Vanipedia, then official ISKCON education repositories, then PureBhakti / Harikatha / Gita Press for wider Gaudiya and Sanatana reference coverage. ²

Prabhupada primary repositories

Vedabase is the strongest single starting point for canonical Prabhupada text research. Its own landing pages describe it as a research tool centered on the teachings of A. C. Bhaktivedanta Swami Prabhupada, and the library exposes books, transcripts, and letters. The transcript library currently surfaces 3,703 transcripts, while the letters library surfaces 6,587 letters, with faceted filtering by type, date, and location. That makes it the cleanest source for systematic ingestion of books, lectures, interviews, conversations, and walks. It also has multilingual front ends, including Spanish, and language switching inside the interface. ³

Use these exact Vedabase entry points:

https://vedabase.io/
https://vedabase.io/en/library/
https://vedabase.io/en/library/transcripts/https://vedabase.io/en/library/letters/https://vedabase.io/en/library/bg/https://vedabase.io/en/library/sb/https://vedabase.io/en/library/cc/
https://vedabase.io/es/library/

Bhaktivedanta Archives is the other top-tier Prabhupada source because it explicitly describes itself as the official repository for documents, manuscripts, correspondence, audio recordings, photographs, films, and artifacts related to Srila Prabhupada. Its collections pages expose audio progress, documents, images, publications, and the VedaBase distribution page. If you want provenance-grade archival backing for anything Prabhupada-related, this belongs above community mirrors. 4

Use these exact Bhaktivedanta Archives entry points:

https://www.prabhupada.com/
https://www.prabhupada.com/About/AAbout.html
https://www.prabhupada.com/Collections/Collections.html
https://www.prabhupada.com/Collections/Audio2.html
https://www.prabhupada.com/Collections/Documents.html
https://www.prabhupada.com/Collections/Images.html
https://www.prabhupada.com/Collections/Publications.html
https://www.prabhupada.com/Vedabase/VedaBase.html

BBT and Krishna.com matter because they are the formal publishing side of the corpus. The BBT states that it publishes Vaishnava texts in 87 languages and also publishes eBooks and audiobooks. Krishna.com explicitly says it is brought by the BBT and offers Bhagavad-gita online versions plus audiobook access. For production use, BBT is the authority you cannot ignore, even if your app reads from other public mirrors.

Use these exact BBT-side entry points:

https://bbt.org/
https://bbt.org/books
https://bbt.org/online-publications
https://bbt.org/languages
https://bbtmedia.com/
https://krishna.com/
https://krishna.com/the-bhagavad-gita-info/bhagavad-gita-online-versions/
https://krishna.com/audio/audiobooks/bhagavad-gita-audiobook/

AsItIs.com is a focused online version of Bhagavad-gita As It Is with search and art-gallery support. It is useful when you want a clean Gita-only source and direct verse URLs. I would treat it as a strong specialized front end, but still subordinate to Vedabase and BBT for master-source governance. 6

Use these exact AsItIs entry points:

https://www.asitis.com/
https://www.asitis.com/1
https://www.asitis.com/gallery/

Prabhupada secondary text repositories and multimedia channels

PrabhupadaVani is one of the best public secondary repositories for Prabhupada audio and transcripts. Its search results explicitly describe the site as dedicated to Prabhupada and containing audio recordings and transcriptions of lectures, conferences, conversations, morning walks, and interviews. Its transcript system exposes filtered views for conversations, lectures/addresses, and audio-backed transcriptions, and it also has a dedicated audio section plus “Prabhupada Radio.” This is very usable for Cursor because the structure is crawlable and the content is already normalized into event-level pages. ⁷

Use these exact PrabhupadaVani entry points:

https://prabhupadavani.org/https://prabhupadavani.org/audio/https://prabhupadavani.org/transcriptions/https://prabhupadavani.org/transcriptions/?type=Conversation https://prabhupadavani.org/transcriptions/?type=Lectures+and+Addresses https://prabhupadavani.org/transcriptions/?audio=Has+audio https://prabhupadavani.org/blog/prabhupada-radio/

Vanisource, Vaniquotes, and Vanipedia work best as a linked research layer. Vanisource states that it contains Prabhupada’s collected books, lectures, letters, and conversations. Vaniquotes states that it organizes Prabhupada’s comments thematically and links each quote back to Vanisource for context. Vanipedia describes itself as a living encyclopedia of Prabhupada’s words and explicitly references projects spanning text, audio, video, and images, including YouTube playlist access. For Cursor, this trio is excellent for topic clustering, quote extraction, and cross-linking, but I would still anchor final provenance to Vedabase or Bhaktivedanta Archives wherever possible. ⁸

Use these exact Vani entry points:

https://vanisource.org/wiki/Main_Page https://vanisource.org/wiki/Category:Letters_from_Srila_Prabhupada_-_by_person https://vanisource.org/wiki/Category:Books_-_Vanisource https://vaniquotes.org/wiki/Main_Page
https://vanipedia.org/wiki/Main_Page

Useful YouTube and media channels split into two groups. The strongest language-scalable source is the Vanipedia “Prabhupada Speaks” network, because Vanipedia explicitly ties its YouTube playlists to multilingual access, and the English and Spanish channel pages are directly discoverable. Hare Krsna TV is an official devotional channel with a large amount of Prabhupada-related lecture media. ISKCON HareKrishna Theatre is valuable for rare historical footage because its channel description says it includes every frame of footage taken of Srila Prabhupada during his years of establishing the movement. These are worthwhile ingest targets for metadata and transcripts, but not substitutes for archival text sources. ⁹

Use these exact channel links:

<https://www.youtube.com/channel/UCBN88f0nRlRMg1CnffvinXw>
<https://www.youtube.com/channel/UCrCoUc77FtaH0JJKmeUnsOQ>
<https://www.youtube.com/channel/UCZ8S3qwowiFztAQBRTawWfA>
<https://www.youtube.com/channel/UC9-R06c2SwpjrvDdVZOQG8Q>

ISKCON Desire Tree is a huge public-access secondary archive and is very practical for bulk media discovery. Its audio section exposes a top-level Srila Prabhupada directory, a topic-wise lecture branch, and a Prabhupada bhajans branch. Its ebook side exposes broad PDF directories and Gaudiya-books directories. The site also says it has nearly 300,000 audio files and large daily download activity. That is operationally useful, but this is exactly the kind of source you should treat as secondary ingestion only, not your gold master. ¹⁰

Use these exact ISKCON Desire Tree links:

https://audio.iskcondesiretree.com/index.php?f=%2F01_-_Srila_Prabhupada&q=f https://audio.iskcondesiretree.com/index.php?f=%2F01_-_Srila_Prabhupada%2F01_-_Lectures%2F01_-_English%2F01_-_Topic_wise&q=f

https://ebooks.iskcondesiretree.com/index.php?f=%2Fpdf%2FGaudiya_Books+&q=f

PrabhupadaBooks.com is useful specifically because it presents itself as the original pre-edit corpus and says it includes books, classes, conversations, morning walks, TV interviews, and letters. That makes it valuable for edition comparison and “original edition” workflows, but because it is not the BBT authority layer, I would classify it as a comparison source rather than your primary canonical source. ¹¹

Use these exact PrabhupadaBooks entry points:

<https://prabhupadabooks.com/>
<https://prabhupadabooks.com/bg>

ISKCON education and curriculum repositories

ISKCON Ministry of Education is the strongest official education bucket I found for curriculum, teacher resources, school materials, videos, and educational philosophy. The home page explicitly highlights projects like Books are the Basis, Summative Exams, Philosophy of Education, Viplavah, and Education for Children. The site’s media library says it contains educational resources including audio, video, and textbooks shared by educators. It also exposes materials pages, children’s books pages, and school-related resources. This is exactly the kind of source Cursor can convert into curriculum maps and content inventories. ¹²

Use these exact Ministry of Education links:

<https://iskconeducation.org/>
https://iskconeducation.org/media_library/
<https://iskconeducation.org/materials/>
<https://iskconeducation.org/books-for-kids/>
<https://iskconeducation.org/philosophy-of-education/>
<https://iskconeducation.org/video/>

For Sunday School, the most useful crawlable sources were not a stable dedicated ISKCON Juhu document repository, but the Ministry of Education's curriculum material and PDFs. The "Starting a Sunday School" page explicitly says the Hare Krishna Sunday School curriculum is designed as a hands-on way of learning spiritual values and practices. The PDF curriculum indexes for the Madhava and Damodar age bands expose structured lesson modules, including Bhagavad-gita introduction, student books, and teacher guides. Teacher-guide PDFs also show concrete activity-based pedagogy around chanting, tilak, deity worship, arati, and shloka-related classroom work. ¹³

Use these exact Sunday School links:

https://iskconeducation.org/media_library_old/Devotional20Practices20-20Part20120-20WB.pdf

For Bhakti Vriksha, the cleanest public source is the official congregation-development side. The Bhakti-vriksha page and training PDFs present the program structure, and the downloadable training module PDFs are directly accessible. This is much cleaner than scraping random reposts. ¹⁴

Use these exact Bhakti Vriksha links:

<https://iskconcongregation.com/programs/bhakti-vriksha/>
https://iskconcongregation.com/wp-content/uploads/2018/11/Bhakti-Vriksha-Training-Module-Book-1_1.pdf
https://iskconcongregation.com/wp-content/uploads/2018/11/Bhakti-Vriksha-Training-Module-Book-2_1.pdf

On your ISKCON Juhu point specifically: I could verify the public ISKCON Mumbai/Juhu site and public references showing Sunday School activity there, but I did not find a robust, stable, crawlable Juhu-hosted document repository comparable to the Ministry of Education resource libraries. So for now, the pragmatic move is to use Ministry of Education and congregation-development repositories as your structured curriculum sources, and treat Juhu as a temple/community context rather than your main document backend. ¹⁵

Use this Juhu general site as contextual reference:

<https://www.iskconmumbai.com/about/about-iskcon>

Wider Gaudiya and Sanatana text libraries

PureBhakti is the strongest match for the Narayana Maharaja side of your request. The site presents itself as featuring lectures, essays, and books on pure bhakti by Srila Bhaktivedanta Narayana Gosvami Maharaja. Its ebook areas include PDF and e-reader formats, and Jaiva-dharma is directly available there. The book pages for Jaiva-dharma and other titles show PDF, EPUB, and MOBI availability. That makes it highly practical for structured ingestion of book metadata and multilingual digital editions. ¹⁶

Use these exact PureBhakti links:

<https://www.purebhakti.com/>

<https://www.purebhakti.com/resources/ebooks-magazines/books-for-e-readers>

<https://www.purebhakti.com/resources/ebooks-magazines/bhakti-books/english>

<https://www.purebhakti.com/resources/ebooks-magazines/books-for-e-readers/1376-jaiva-dharma>

<https://www.purebhakti.com/resources/ebooks-magazines/bhakti-books/english/21-jaiva-dharma>

Harikatha is the companion official archive for audio and transcript-heavy Narayana Maharaja content. The site explicitly calls itself the official archive and points users to PureBhakti for books and transcripts. Its audio archive exposes large lecture inventories, category filters, language filters, and download links. This is the right ingestion target when you want lecture-series metadata, morning walks, darsanas, interviews, and downloadable audio rather than just ebook texts. ¹⁷

Use these exact Harikatha links:

<https://harikatha.com/>

<https://harikatha.com/audios/>

<https://harikatha.com/about/>

Gita Press is the strongest official Sanatana library/publisher source in your list for texts like Ramcharitmanas and Vinay Patrika. Its current official site exposes a general ebook collection portal, buy-books portal, and app-first digital delivery model. The honest limitation is this: during this research pass, I could reliably verify the official Gita Press ebook portal, but I could not verify stable, search-indexed public URLs for individual title pages such as Ramcharitmanas or Vinay Patrika on the new site. So Cursor should crawl the ebook catalog level first rather than expecting search-engine-visible title URLs from the public web. ¹⁸

Use these exact Gita Press links:

<https://gitapress.org/>

<https://gitapress.org/ebook>

<https://gitapress.org/buybooks>

Priority stack and ingestion cautions

If you want the cleanest priority order for Cursor, use this.

Tier A master sources: Vedabase, Bhaktivedanta Archives, BBT, Krishna.com, ISKCON Ministry of Education, ISKCON Congregation resources, PureBhakti, Harikatha, Gita Press.

Tier B structured secondary sources: PrabhupadaVani, Vanisource, Vaniquotes, Vanipedia.

Tier C convenience mirrors and media-heavy secondaries: ISKCON Desire Tree, PrabhupadaBooks.com, YouTube channels. This ordering gives you the best balance between provenance, breadth, and crawlability.

The real risk is rights and downstream use. BBTi says it handles rights and permissions for BBT works, and it explicitly notes that official ISKCON temples and projects under GBC authority have blanket permission only for incidental use. That is not the same thing as unrestricted bulk ingestion, reproduction, or app redistribution. So if your application will do more than cite, search, or excerpt internally, you should treat BBT-origin material as a permissions workflow, not a free-scrape workflow. 20

For handoff convenience, this is the machine-ready starter set I would give Cursor first, before expanding into the longer list above. These links cover the highest-signal public repositories discovered in this research pass. 21

If I were forcing a blunt recommendation, it would be this: do not let Cursor start from random YouTube and mirror sites first. Start from Vedabase + Bhaktivedanta Archives + BBT + ISKCON Education + PureBhakti/Harikatha + Gita Press, and only then enrich with PrabhupadaVani, Vani sites, ISKCON Desire Tree, and YouTube. That ordering is the difference between a trustworthy corpus and a messy scrape. ²²
